Depredations Report

Revolutionary War Damages

in Chester County

during the time of the # Battle of the Clouds

September, 1777

This document contains Chester County Revolutionary War claims for selected townships from the days before and after the Battle of the Clouds which took place on September 16, 1777.

It is based on the register, compiled in November 1782, which contains accounts of property of Chester County residents seized or (not as frequently) destroyed, without compensation, by the British Army, aided by “adherents” (Pennsylvania Tories), during their march toward and occupation of Philadelphia, from the fall of 1777 until June 1778. Most of the accounts are for damages that occurred during the British march through Chester County in mid-September 1777.

The township and borough tax assessors, acting upon the orders of the county commissioners, collected these accounts in their respective townships and boroughs. Each account consists of an inventory and appraisal of the goods and chattel alleged to have been seized, with in many cases the property-holder affirming or swearing, before a county justice of the peace, to its veracity.

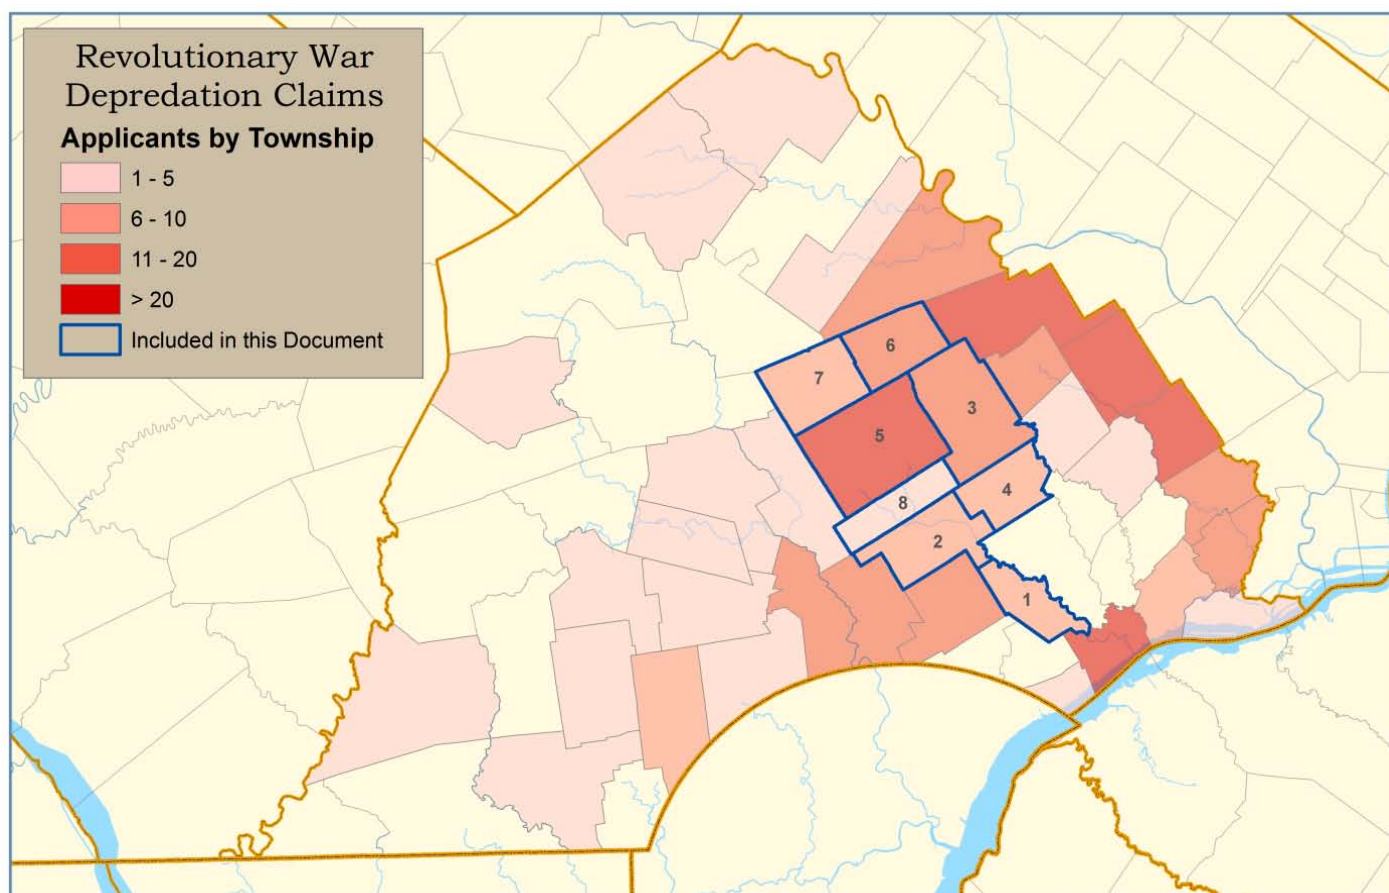

Mandated under a Pennsylvania statute of September 21st 1782, the main purpose of these accounts was to bolster the American position in the peace negotiations with Great Britain that had begun the previous April, with compensation to the aggrieved property owners being part of that settlement.<sup>1</sup> This was not to be, however, for the treaty resulting from these negotiations, the Treaty of Paris (1783), while recognizing American Independence, did not include compensation for colonists whose property had been seized during the war. <sup>1</sup>
